• Boston. Writes on family business. Yesterday was the opening of the "Abolition Fair (which they had the effrontery to style Anti-Slavery)..." Maria Weston Chapman received money from Mrs. Eliza Lee (Cabot) Follen and from Mrs. Lucy Sessions. The latter says; "Sister Mrs. Abigail Folsom is a precious soul." Joel P. Bishop is giving trouble, demanding of Garrison the publication in the Liberator of an inquisitory letter.

London. The writer is homesick, having met with discouragement from almost every quarter. "Even R.R. Gurley or colonization memory can gain a hearing among abolitionists, who treat me with comparative contempt." Describes his voyage on the British Queen. Has called on John Bowring, William H. Ashhurst, and Professor (William) Adam. On the road to Edinburgh, the writer visited the Peases; Elizabeth Pease was like an oasis in the desert. Also visited Harriet Martineau. George Thompson was almost the only one who gave the writer encouragement, but H.B. Stanton, J.G. Birney and John Scoble were scheming to cripple Thompson's influence in Edinburgh and Charles Stuart was travelling "to sift in New Orleans." A rumor had been circulated that Garrison was a Socinian and "in that place nothing... could have murdered his influence more than this." The writer reports on meetings of committees of the men's and women's (Edinburgh) societies, where Stuart, representing the opposition, and Thompson, Charles L. Remond and the writer discussed old and new organization. The women, prejudiced by the men, were "horrified" when the writer exposed the treachery of the new organisers. The writer analyzes the character of George Thompson, whom he considers a "creature of circumstances." After another committee meeting at which Stuart and the writer spoke, the latter had a change; "a good state of feeling was produced." Recommended Mrs. Harriet Gairdener as a valuable correspondent. In London the writer is negotiating with Thomas Fowell Buxton and the Duchess of Sutherland.

Dednam, Mass., The writer complains of lack of news, wants to know if the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society's Board is still alive. Has sent a precious manuscript for the Liberty Bell and does not know if it has been accepted. Fears that he has fallen from Joel P. Bishop's good graces. Exclaims about the Abolitionist's being "down upon Collins!"

[Darlington, (England)] Encloses letters to Mary and Thomas Clarkson for J. A. C. to read. If he dislikes the allusions to Garrison and the Liberator in the letters, he is to burn them. T. Clarkson is very feeble and cannot endure long visits. C. Stuart's attack on Garrison prompted a recent letter to J. A. C. Says that when T. Sturge "does take a thing up, he does it heartily." Expects the British & Foreign Anti-Slavery Society to refuse to aid J. A. C. Anne Knight may give him some money, and T. Clarkson may give him a note of approval. Julia Smith wrote "respecting a reply to Birney." Mentions others who "half-~~promised~~" to write it. "I think H<sup>t</sup> Bevan w<sup>d</sup> give thee an introduction to Amelia Opie ..." T. Sturge could introduce J. A. C. to J. J. Gurney and his brother, Samuel Gurney.

«Jamaica Plain, Mass.. Referring to a note from the addressee, which she received shortly before going to the "conversation party," the writer states that she did not have time to ascertain the objects of the Fair, and a "conversation on the subject" would have interrupted the course adopted by her class. The writer explains her attitude toward the Anti-Slavery cause, which commands her respect, although her own path "leads a different course and often leaves me quite ignorant of what you are doing." Nevertheless the writer has not been intolerant. "I have wronged none of you by a hasty judgment or careless words ... never chimed in with the popular hue and cry." The writer is interested in "the late move-

e ? . The writer welcomes the addressee back to New England and her Anti-Slavery labors. The writer tells of her gradual conversion to Abolition. Describes the section (of Springfield, Mass.?) called "Hayti," where negroes live in "poverty, wretchedness & sin ... but especially Intemperance." In spite of the squalor and depravity, these free negroes are not worse off than slaves. The writer and her sister, who kept a school at the house of a "respectable family" where they resided, were evicted because they received an evening visit from a negro preacher, an escaped ex-slave. The writer, however, found a champion, who made it possible for them to stay till the end of the term. The same friend [redacted] the plot of some young men to mob the writer and her sister when they went to "Hayti".

To Sarah Margaret (Fuller) Ossoli

" ? " The writer is answering the addressee's letter in place of Mrs. M. W. Chapman, who is pressed with engagements "attendant on her sudden departure for Hayti." Is sending the last Annual Report of the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society, written by Mrs. Chapman, "from which something of her sentiments on the position which women should occupy may be gathered." Correcting a misapprehension in the addressee's letter, the writer explains that the Anti-Slavery party "as such" has for its object only the emancipation of the slave. "The one principle of the inviolability of personal freedom is the only one to which he (the Abolitionist) stands committed."

New Bedford, Mass.. The writer tells how she and her companions argued the conductor of a train into withdrawing his demand that "friend Borden" (colored?) take his seat in the Jim Crow car. Tells of the good reception given Edmund Quincy's lecture in New Bedford. The formation of a new society open to both men and women is being considered. "Cousin Susan thinks it an excellent plan." "The political folks are hard at work in Bristol County." Joshua Leavitt has been lecturing at Fall River. Praises Elizabeth Rodman.

Norwich, England. The writer "would as soon go among the Southern slave holders to solicit aid, as among the abolitionists of Great Britain." Says J. G. Birney, H. B. Stanton and others prejudice the minds of the leading English Abolitionists so that "we are shunned by them as we should be ... by the rankest pro-slavery men of our own country." The writer has received from Elizabeth Pease extracts from letters written to one or more British abolitionists, one of these extracts having been taken from a letter by N. Colver. The writer copies these extracts, which are derogatory to Garrison, and throw suspicion on Collins. The writer suggests to the addressee that he "let Colver read these extracts in the Liberator" and that he send letters to prominent British Abolition-

Georgetown, Demerara, British Guiana. The writer, having left New England suddenly, has not abandoned the field, but intends to write. His aim is "a total revolution in the whole system of philosophy relative to man considered as an intellectual & active being." The writer wants to apply to the study of man's nature the same inductive method that has been successfully used in "natural philosophy." Relates how the difficulties encountered in his studies and the disappointment "at the scandalous misbehaviour of my temperance people whom I had enlisted into a party" brought about an attack of low spirits. But the "curative effect" of the climate here has exceeded his expectations, and he has resumed his scientific work Gives the titles of the eight treatises in which the writer's philosophy of nature is to set forth. Meanwhile the writer is collecting facts on the results of emancipation in the West Indies. Believes that those free colored people in the United States who are skilled in agriculture or mechanic arts, or who have some capital would benefit greatly from emigrating to Jamaica, Trinidad or Guiana. "It is probable that this colony will shortly appropriate a considerable sum of money to pay the expense of immigrants to Guiana."

Roxbury, Mass.: The writer is glad that the addressees escaped the below zero weather during the week in which they were shutting up the house at No.11 West Street. Elizabeth B. Chapman is staying with the writer and is well and happy. Says that the other Chapman children are well. Reports on the proceedings of the Boston Female Anti-Slavery Society, the cost of binding the Liberty Bell and other Anti-Slavery matters. Tells of an evening at Mrs. Thankful (Hussey) Southwick's, with George Bradburn, "only dashed by a very painful letter from James Gibbons calling for assistance to get out another copy of the Standard". Fears the Standard will stop. The Liberator, however, "stands firm" and is out of debt. "Joel P.: Bishop continues mousing round & doing all the harm he can." Dedham, Mass.: The writer was not prepared for the thousand dollars (transmitted by John A. Collins). Emphasizes the obligation to help Collins "to place him in his true position before the English Abolitionists." Sympathizes with the addressee's indignation at N. Colver, but advises her not to worry about his punishment. "Don't you know that he is damned already?" Elaborates on this idea. Describes a book called Child Album by J. S. C. Abbott, which presents a "notion of Heaven" that seems to the writer neither attractive nor convincing. The writer misses the Chapmans. Tells of a meeting in Dedham to hear Garrison. Refers to "Joel P.: Bishop's and John Smith's absurdities" in connection with the next Anti-Slavery meeting. Objects to holding the meeting at Hines Chapel.

Roxbury, Mass.. The writer heard that E. Quincy presided at a meeting in Dedham "with great dignity." A long letter arrived from Wendell and Anne Phillips in Florence, complaining fog and cold rooms. They did not venture to go to Rome on account of the pestilence. John A. Collins transmitted "almost a thousand dollars." The writer wants Mrs. Chapman to write to everyone whom she can influence in Collins's behalf. Wants N. Colver's lies exposed by the publication of Collins's letter in the Liberator. Thinks "Friend Samuel E. Sewall would be ashamed of his present position." A. A. Phelps left the addressee's notes of his speech with hardly any alterations. Mary Parker can live only a short time.

Gives advice in regard to possible donors; David Joy is very liberal, but indolent; Thomas Macy is the wealthiest of the local abolitionists, in approaching whom one should flatter his self-esteem. The writer refers to the Standard as "a grand paper." Tells of the difficulties of the Abolitionists here, who feel the absence of their champion, George Bradburn. Praises Bradburn, mentioning "the good we think he is doing in our Legislature." The writer remembers her visit to Boston at the time of the Anti-Slavery fair, but disliked the "unbounded applause that is constantly bestowed upon women"-a procedure which will be unnecessary when "the true

Roxbury. The writer went to Weymouth with Hervey Weston and Lizzy Chapman. "... little Anne was perfectly overjoyed to see us ..." Tells about the other Chapman children, and the return to Roxbury. Edmund Quincy found that Samuel Philbrick wanted to hold the position of treasurer indefinitely. Criticizes the Board of the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society for not acting firmly. Tells about the election of officers. William M. Chace was elected Recording Secretary. Quincy nominated Henry G. Chapman in place of Samuel Philbrick as Treasurer. Samuel May Jr. was chairman of the committee in charge of the Treasurer's Report. The writer complains that Ellis Gray Loring did not exercise enough control over May and other associates. Ms. A. 9.2

To Caroline Weston

No. 20

Wingham, Mass., The writer praises an article on woman in the Boston Quarterly Review. Tried to find material on Toussaint L'Ouverture in the Library. Refers to H. Martineau's book, The Hour and the Man. Asks if Nathaniel Colver has sold himself to the Devil. Knew him to be a wolf in sheep's clothing ever since she heard him discuss Non-Resistance principles with Henry C. Wright in Chardon St. Chapel. Reports on a joint meeting of the local male and female Anti-Slavery societies. L. B. Lincoln and Dr. Willard take the Massachusetts Abolitionist and have the impression that Garrison is "entirely unworthy respect." The writer thinks the New Organization "a curd compound of falsehood and deception, sanctity and holy zeal."

«Dedham, Mass.. The writer has reported to J. A. Collins on the Annual Meeting. Remarks, in reference to the addressee's transmission of documents to England, that the women Abolitionists are "more executive than most of the brethren." Lectured to Quakers at Lynn. Staying at William Bassett's, he saw Abby Kelley and Elizabeth(?) Whittier, sister of J. G. Whittier, "a little Quakeress with tremendous black eyes."

Tells of a session with a phrenologist named Coombs. Mentions a sermon by Theodore Parker, in which it was stated that the Anti-Slavery and Non-Resistance movements were the only manifestations of Christianity without Emersonian or Channingian qualifications.

Boston. The writer reports on affairs of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society and the Annual Meeting. The "Andover plot" vanished into thin air. The Board members were all re-elected. Tells about the difficulties made by Joel P. Bishop, "a perfect Judas Iscariot ..." Emphasizes the "devotion and disinterestedness" of John A. Collins and the assurance that "no claim of his would ever annoy the Society, even should we prove to be deeply in his debt." Edmund Quincy "concocted a resolution of a very biting character" respecting the extracts in Elizabeth Pease's letter. G. Bradburn made a speech that delighted all parties. Colver's reply was a "vulgar, disgraceful ... tirade." (John Murray?) Spear made a very good speech. Anne W. Weston received a letter from New my last of Parker's A. S. sermon at Spring St." Thinks "Theodore?," Parker "will make a figure before the world." Comments disparagingly on the action of the clergy in regard to Rev. John Pierpont and tells of Pierpont's extraordinary conduct at the funeral of Mrs. Stewart. "Ripley is actually coming out here next month to commence the Millenium at Ellis' farm ..." Doubts if he will be successful. "Frank Shaw has bought land & is going to build & live at Spring St. (not with R.) near his sister Mrs. Russell ..." Asks the addressee to consider settling in Dedham. Describes Adin Ballou's Fraternal Society. Compares briefly with the Brook Farm experiment and thinks it has a better chance of success.

Weymouth, Mass.. Reports on the welfare of the addressee's children. Little Henry "bids fair to know how to read some time or other." Little Ann continues to be "the very queen of hearts." Relates how George Bradburn, invited to speak at a temperance meeting, fled on seeing Nathaniel Colver. Mr. Amos Bronson Alcott has no lights in his house "because he will not sanction killing whale." The writer has written several articles for the Offering, which will "get along somehow till the 20th of March when Collins is expected." Mentions the kind hospitality of Henrietta Sargent. "I don't think L.M.C. Lydia Maria Child? treats them Sargents, with all the attention she might." Weymouth are interested in the Herald of Freedom, which almost cuts out the Liberator." Abby Kelley thinks of joining the Community (Brook Farm). "Mr. George Ripley highly admires her."

. Boston. The writer's legislative duties have taken all his time. His favorite measure, the Marriage Bill, has again been defeated, but the writer expects it to be passed next year, for he has kept stirring up the present Legislature. The House has passed resolves, introduced by the writer, requesting Congress to alter the naturalization laws, also a bill abolishing imprisonment for debt. N. Colver continues to behave "atrociously." The writer was present at the Annual Meeting, "when the extracts of his libellous letters to England, were read." The third party Abolitionists have just held a convention, - "a contemptible affair." Tells of a discussion there about the abolition of the poll tax as a condition for voting.

To Deborah Weston

No.30

New Bedford, Mass., The writer explains that her silence was caused by the death of "the little darling" from dropsy of the head. Expresses indignation at the conduct of N. Colver. Reflects that the spread of Abolitionist doctrines has unveiled the rotten foundations of many institutions. The writer is looking for a copy of the "pastoral letter." Comments on the course of lectures given by the poet Richard H. Dana as "far more likely to do harm than good;" the writer was astonished at the "many weak things that were dealt out to us" in his lecture on woman, the tone of which "was entirely at variance with my Quaker views." The women's Anti-Slavery society was dissolved at its annual meeting. The young men had altered the name of their society, which now includes both men and women. A sewing circle will meet as before.

Poplar St., Boston. The writer was warmly received by H. Sargent at Poplar Street. Mentions a letter from Mary Grew. "I think she approves our principles and hates our measures." Another letter indicates that Mrs. Lydia M. Child is "evidently unhappy and discontented ... Pity that one who really lives so very much in the outward, should so perseveringly think she exists but in the inward .... I should hardly dare to trust her with the Standard." Mrs. William Adam says that J. A. Collins spent an evening with them. Richard Hildreth is editing the Guiana Chronicle. Judge Weston and his wife of Augusta, Me. have been communicated for allowing a sewing circle to hold a dance in their house. "The Judge talked «New Kent Road (London?). In reply to the addressees' query, the writer explains the English custom of cooperating in philanthropic enterprises, without making particular religious affiliations a condition. Discourses on the importance of free labor industries in furthering the suppression of slavery. Cotton manufacturers wish to get free labor cotton from India and not to depend on America. The Association for the Civilization of Africa uses only such measures as the writer, "a friend & lover of peace can cordially unite with." The natives are to be encouraged to raise cotton "to supersede slave grown cotton of America." The writer explains the treatment in England of John A. Collins. .Hingham, Mass., Writes enthusiastically about the new minister. The abolition meetings are drawing more and more people, but the writer questions their motives; "It is through love of Mr. Stearns, rather than love of the slave." Describes Mr. Stearns's efforts in behalf of temperance, and the fluttering caused among the "tavern haunters." The writer mourns the loss of Dr. Charles T.C. Follen, "the best of men," and comments on the "shame the Unitarians of Boston have put upon themselves, by withholding their houses" (for a memorial service). Tells of a man from Raleigh, N.C., who listens to abolition sermons. The writer is planning a visit to Washington with a party of friends, and wishes addressee would join them.

Chauncy Place, Boston.. Assuming that the addressee has already received letters informing her of the death of her little daughter Gertrude on April 6, after an illness of two days, the writer gives assurance that "everything care & tenderness could do for her relief was done." After a page of condolence, the writer proceeds to various news. Elizabeth Pease, in a "most excellent letter," spoke with kindness of Collins and thought his mission would do great good in England. Joseph Sturge is in America. The writer attended the meetings of the Ministry Convention. "There was too much uproar & too little wish for the truth to suit [redacted] Amos A. Convention...trying to show its Infidel character." It is not known who the editor of the Free American is, Charles T. Torrey having resigned. (Silas?) Hawley is very ill. The quarterly meeting of the Boston Female Society, with only 35 present, was very good, Sophia L. Little making a good address. Garrison is laboring devotedly as lecturer. "New Organization quietly going down." James G. Birney married. Gerrit Smith's sister-in-law. Henry B. Stanton is studying law. With Mrs. Lydia Maria Child's going to the Standard, it will stand a better financial chance. "Mr. William Ladd is dead. So there goes the American Peace Society."

Port Plate, Santo Domingo.. The writer indulges himself with the idea that, through the addressees' agency, "Hayti will soon become a powerful coadjutor with the Antislavery Society in the U.S.A." Suggests the printing of a pamphlet in the French language, addressed to Haitiens, setting forth "the effect which slavery still has upon Haiti," and inviting the government to participate in the (anti-slavery) labors.

c.Dednam, Mass., The writer offers consolation to the addressee on the death of "little Gertrude," and announces the birth of a daughter in his own house. Comments on the character of William M. Chace and his resignation from the "American Board." Refers to "the sneers of Luther Lee at the Free American for its servility to the clergy"; considers the paper under C. T. Torrey "the silliest thing" he has ever read. Reports on the annual meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society, and compares it with that of 1838. "All the services are voluntary & spontaneous." Mentions Alvan Stewart's speech, James Canning's objections, approves of Lindley Coates as President, notes the absence of Gerrit Smith, the Tappans, Leavitt, Weld, etc. An adjournment was Weymouth, Mass.. The writer attended a community meeting at the Ripleys. Mr. George Ripley declared "he never went to bed in his life so little tired as now after working in the field all day." The writer thought Mrs. Sophia W. (Dana) Ripley "inferior, not at all more remarkable than Anna Alvord. She was anxious to assure her own mind that... the canons of gentility were not infringed upon." The writer "rather liked" Elizabeth Peabody. While visiting, the writer read part of Combe's Tour; quotes his reference to the addressees. Reports the death of Miss Paul. The writer attended an interesting meeting of the Norfolk (Anti-Slavery) Society in Dorchester. Received a note from Harriet Martineau, thanking for "Liberty."

London. The writer disclaims sacrifices for the cause on her part, and any loss or the good opinion of her friends has been compensated by friendship with "some of the noblest spirits" in America. John A. Collins has been "passing through a fiery trial." The writer feels "a sister's love" for Wendell and Ann Phillips. Tells about the attitude of the London Committee; "John Scoble intimated that they had ample evidence to prove all Nathaniel Colver said." The British India Society have consented to let George Thompson work for the Anti-Corn Law League. Referring to the addressee's disappointment in Thompson's statement at the (World?) Convention, the writer tells that he "acted very" before the Edinburgh com-

Philadelphia. With the help of Sarah Pugh, the writer has obtained the desired copy (the other item on this number) sent herewith. Hopes that Mary Grew, who is now in Boston, "will not be new-organized by her intimacy with those of that class ... We regard her as one of our most valuable Anti-Slavery laborers," who is also "advancing in her views of woman's 'appropriate sphere.'" The writer rejoices that Mrs. Lydia Maria Child "is doing so much for the cause & for woman by acquitting herself so nobly in the Editorial chair." William Henry Furness says the Standard is becoming one of the best papers in the country. The writer, having been shown by James Sloan Gibbons a letter recently received from Maria Weston Chapman, has sympathized with the Chapmans in "the loss of

New Bedford, Mass.. Gives a detailed account of the measures by which, through the efforts of New Bedford abolitionists, a colored slave of the Ludlams was taken away by the sheriff to be set free. The abolitionists have, in consequence, "had to encounter much reproach and obloquy." The owners of the "chattel personal" are determined if possible "to ruin Spear." The latter, when visiting the jail on an errand of mercy, was handed a writ and warned to look round for bail.

Groton, Mass.. Regretfully declines an invitation from the addressee to come to Weymouth and attend the meeting of the Norfolk Anti-Slavery Society. The writer is arranging for an absence from home of two or three weeks, and so cannot go to Weymouth on the eve of his departure. Rejoices in Mr. John A. Collins's safe arrival. "I expected Wendell Phillips, to come home the same man... It is your fools that swell & strut on their return from abroad." Gives news of Groton clerical affairs, especially as pertaining to Mr. (Silas) Hawley.

c.Boston. The writer begins with a report of letters mailed and received. Mentions a correspondence between Warren Weston and Joshua Bates on the subject of trading with Russia and the sugar business. Tells of legal transactions in connection with the Weymouth property. Mentions the Back River farm. Joshua Bates appears to have owned all the property on which the Westons lived. Henry G. Chapman is very sick. Says her school is going very well, but she is thinking of moving to Cambridge. The school ran for four years in Roxbury. Says she had "no acquaintance in the place & a great and intense dislike of me [redacted] head against ..." Names the rival schools in her neighborhood.

•New York.. Reports on a visit to Pennsylvania. The Standard has great favor with the abolitionists there; some even talk of uniting the Freeman with it, though the writer thinks such an arrangement most improbable. "They all agree that C.C.B. (Charles Calistus Burleigh) is not half as good an editor as lecturer. . . they are seriously talking of inviting Wendell Phillips to the editorial chair!" Comments on the Standard under Mrs. Lydia Maria Child's editorship; it is "a very agreeable paper... but I could wish it had in it more of the Liberator fire. It does not sufficiently expose the corruption of the Church ... Its agreeableness is attracting the support of some half-and-half, milk-and-water part of abolitionists ... It is

«New York.» The writer has returned from a visit to two counties of Pennsylvania where he found a "revival of anti-slavery feeling," and the abolitionists "almost unanimously in favor of Old Organization." The letter is mainly concerned with the proposal to hold the anniversary meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society at Philadelphia in December. The Executive Committee has instructed the writer to correspond with friends in different parts of the country to ascertain their opinions. The writer, favoring the plan, presents five reasons for his decision. The (Executive) Committee has requested the writer to  and collect funds in Ohio and Indiana, "particularly  the Quakers there."

Hingham, Mass.. A letter in which the writer invited the addressee to spend the fourth of July was misent and found last week. The writer had to miss the Norfolk County (anti-slavery) meeting at Weymouth because of preparations for a temperance tea party. Reflects that some of the resolutions discussed on that occasion are as important as any that come before abolitionists. Rejoices that in Hingham they have an anti-slavery pastor. Nevertheless they have a strong pro-slavery church and negro pews, and the building is closed to reformers. Admires the bold stand of the New Hampshire abolitionists. The writer hopes to have Theodore Parker lecture in Hingham. But "New Views" do not find much favor with our staid, old-fashioned population." Porto Plata, Santo Domingo. The writer acknowledges the receipt of the Standard, which he has distributed among the Porto Plata Anti-Slavery Society members. They express their regret at the death of Miss Paul. The writer has made arrangements for the sending of some Santiago hammocks(?) for the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society fair. Reports on the Haitian attitude toward the cause, citing the opinion that the question is unpopular here. Hopes the addressee will write for the purpose of enlightening indifferent or hostile persons here.

«Roxbury, Mass.» The writer gives advice in regard to the question of the addressee's taking over the school in New Bedford. Recommends keeping Emma or Lucia Weston with her as she is not well enough to be alone. "If taking the school will injure your credit, don't do it-if it will not I should take it." The writer has her "lawful 25" (pupils), but may be left alone any day, and would then like to join the addressee. Describes a devastating storm in Weymouth. The ship Grafton arrived and brought Warren Weston's journal of his passage-"my soul rejoiced over the books that he has recorded having read." Wendell and Ann Phillips have taken house in Essex Street.

"Darlington, England. The writer is pleased to hear of the addressee's safe arrival. Refers to all his "sufferings in our land" while fighting for the Old Organization, and adds; "the victory was thine." Mentions the receipt of a pamphlet of the Mass. Abolition Society from Charles Stuart, who has returned to England. The writer tells of the illness of her little nephew. Believes avarice to be the chief cause of poverty in England. The writer does not agree with the Collins view of Quakerism as "practical Infidelity," but thinks that "it is the deviation from the principles of Quakerism that produce the lamentable effect." Wishes that, in writing on the Society of Friends, the addressee would distinguish between the Orthodox and the Hicksite sects. Sends word to S.J. A private chapel in the Mill Village was at first denied him, but after he had drawn a large crowd lecturing in "a little hole," it was offered under conditions he did not accept. John Pierpont gave an admirable lecture. The writer's wife went to a party at one of the "first families," and there was no wine on the supper table, for the first time since the [redacted] of man." Weymouth, Mass.. The writer assures the addressee that she need not worry because she has only ten scholars in her school. Reports on affairs at Weymouth. Comments on the Universalist preaching of (John M.?) Spear. The writer tells of her domestic tasks and of having written to Mary G. Chapman advising her "to hold no communication with C. or any of his friends who might be in town at the Convention." Has been preparing for Hervey Weston's departure. Little Henry Chapman is a very troublesome child. "Annie G. Chapman, is a little jewel." A.L. 4 p. 10 x 8 in.

The advice given to Mary C. [redacted] apparently refers to circumstances connected with the termination of her engagement. See letter No.24.

Boston. The writer reports family news, the arrival of a box from Glasgow for the Anti-Slavery Fair on which duty was paid, and the imminent publication of the Liberty Bell. Mentions the purchase of Isaac Knapp's interest in the Liberator for $25 and the objections to the transaction raised by John Cutts Smith and Hamlett Bates, who both wrote angry letters to E. G. Loring about it. Loring thinks that Joel P. Bishop and Knapp's friends may appeal to the public. "Mr. Loring has asked J. Q. Adams to write for the "Liberty Bell". Mrs. Lydia Maria Child is writing for it sub rosa. The Pennsylvania Freeman wishes to with the National Anti-Slavery Standard. Mrs. Child objects. The writer thinks the

Demerara, British Guiana. Before leaving Boston, the writer deposited with J. A. Collins the stereotype plates of his books, Archie Moore and Despotism in America, to be printed and sold by the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society. Collins sold only seventy copies in one year. The writer, however, has 150 copies of Archie Moore, previously printed, which he would like to have distributed among the slaveholding members of Congress. The climate of Demerara suits the writer, although he has been ill several weeks. The writer has sent to Mr. Wheeler a part of his work, Rudiments of the Inductive Science of Man, suggesting that it be handed to [redacted] addressee. Discusses his theory of progress and reaction. Has sent the addressee a report on the laboring population of this colony, containing Dedham, Mass.. The writer is anxious for news. Heard that Mrs. Abigail Folsom had left Boston for another city, from Charles Wade, "the reformed drunkard." Hopes that the proceeds of the Anti-Slavery fair will be enough to pay off the debts of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. Refers to the ball to be given in honor of Prince de Joinville. Recalls a remark by Talleyrand on American luxury made in the presence of George Ticknor, who repeated it to the writer. A.L.S. 4 p. 9 3/8 x 7 5/8 in.

Weymouth, Mass.. The writer gives an account of Mrs. Ann (Bates) Weston's illness and of the intensified domestic work, including Thanksgiving preparations. J. A. Collins spoke to good audiences in Weymouth. Hervey Weston left yesterday in good spirits. Caroline Weston and the writer "still think Mrs. Morgan's school a desirable one, & if you don't feel able to take it, I will." The writer longs to be in a situation where she will be able to pay someone else to do what she now does. Believes that homeopathy will help the addressee, and wishes her mother would try it. Alludes to a letter from the addressee which caused astonishment. Describes Mrs. M. W. Chapman's lively reception of Charles T.

North Weymouth, Mass.: The writer has been advised to subscribe to the Liberator. Says that "as it respects slavery I like it but there is not but a very little put in." The paper when it was first published, was very good, "but now it has become a poor filthy paper, it is mostly fitted up with pieces about Peace, Nonresistance, the Sabbath, Church, and Ministry, and as it goes on the poor slave will never be liberated."

Warns of divine judgment and quotes a poem: "Vain man thy fond perquisites forbear." Calls Amos Bronson Alcott "a companion of the devil" and "a blasphemer."
